

Delivering More Accurate, Actionable Address Intelligence — When and How You Need It

Each year, millions of Americans change their addresses, posing challenges for organizations that rely on contact information. In 2022 alone, 12.6% or approximately 28.2 million Americans, changed their place of residence according to US Census data.¹ This high volume of address changes can lead to outdated databases.

Moreover, the average American moves approximately 11.7 times in their lifetime, underscoring the dynamic nature of residential mobility in the US.² Without robust systems to track and update address information, businesses risk decreased contact rates and operational inefficiencies.
